

The day you were born was the best day of your life.
From there, you learned to smile through pain and
Say "it's a good day, " even if that meant you were lying.
You've been lying every day for a long time.
You've been painting your possessions a deeper shade of blue,
Cause that's what your mother and your father asked of you.

Well, they don't like rainbows, do they?
They don't like rainbows, do they?
And they don't like snowflakes, either.
Give them a snowstorm, darling!

You asked your mother what those words meant to her.
She never said them, but you knew she meant them.
She didn't have to tell you, you're her liability.
You heard her telling her work friends.

You tried to be the boy she wished that you were.
You cut your hair for her, you burnt that dress for her.
You painted every wall the deepest shade of blue.
They covered up the rainbow but they still couldn't hide you.

Well, they don't like rainbows, do they?
They don't like rainbows, do they?
And they don't like snowflakes, either.
Give them a snowstorm darling.

Give them a snowstorm!

Understand you have a place on this earth,
That is something you can't afford to forget.
Understand you will encounter people
Trying to blame someone else for their own self hatred.

You were conditioned to hate yourself,
Based on the opinion of everyone else.
Rethink. You are not a label or a liability.
Rethink. You are not a label or a liability.

You are not a label or a liability.
You are a ray across the sky, don't forget your strength!

Rethink. You are not a label or a liability.
Rethink. You are not a label or a liability.
Rethink! You are not a label or a liability.
You are not a label.
